

Thank you for your enquiry

New Zealand is almost unique in the world in not having legal standards for the regular testing and maintenance of gymnasium equipment.

While there are currently no specific standards or regulations for gymnasiums, the Health and Safety in Employment (HSE) Act 1992 places the responsibility on employers and facility owners to take all practicable steps to ensure the safety of all users. The absence of a regular inspection and maintenance programme may result in expensive legal action in the event of an injury caused by equipment failure.

SportSafe, a wholly owned subsidiary of Gymleader NZ Ltd, provides a range of inspection and maintenance programmes to not only enable you to comply with the HSE Act but help you get the maximum use out of your gymnasium equipment.
